

1. Pharmaceutical industry – The pharmaceutical industry is a highly competitive and regulated industry. It is characterized by high R&D costs, long development cycles, and high barriers to entry. The industry is dominated by a few large companies, and it is subject to strict government oversight.

2. Healthcare providers – Healthcare providers, including hospitals, clinics, and physicians, are the primary users of pharmaceuticals. They are responsible for diagnosing and treating patients, and they play a key role in the distribution of drugs.

3. Insurance companies – Insurance companies, including private insurers and government programs like Medicare and Medicaid, are responsible for paying for pharmaceuticals. They play a key role in the distribution of drugs, and they are subject to government oversight.

4. Government – The government plays a key role in the distribution of pharmaceuticals. It is responsible for regulating the industry, setting prices, and ensuring that drugs are distributed equitably.

5. Patients – Patients are the ultimate recipients of pharmaceuticals. They are responsible for paying for their own care, and they play a key role in the distribution of drugs.

6. Pharmaceutical distributors – Pharmaceutical distributors, including wholesalers and retailers, are responsible for distributing drugs to healthcare providers and patients. They play a key role in the distribution of drugs, and they are subject to government oversight.

7. Pharmaceutical manufacturers – Pharmaceutical manufacturers are responsible for producing drugs. They play a key role in the distribution of drugs, and they are subject to government oversight.

8. Pharmaceutical research and development – Pharmaceutical research and development is the process of discovering and developing new drugs. It is a highly competitive and regulated industry, and it is subject to government oversight.

9. Pharmaceutical marketing – Pharmaceutical marketing is the process of promoting drugs to healthcare providers and patients. It is a highly competitive and regulated industry, and it is subject to government oversight.

10. Pharmaceutical distribution – Pharmaceutical distribution is the process of getting drugs from manufacturers to healthcare providers and patients. It is a highly competitive and regulated industry, and it is subject to government oversight.

Laura S Weiner

1745

[illegible]

INTERFERENCE SEARCHED
Class	Subclass	Date	Examiner
429	231.8	1-14-04	CSW
429	231.4
429	232
428/367, 468, 387
427/122, 215
252/182.1		1-14-04	CSW

[illegible]